

SCOTS' CHURCH MANSE BUILDING

PRESENTATION PLATE.—Yesterday we were shown by Messrs. Flavelle, Brothers, and Roberts, a piece of plate intended for presentation to Mr. John McElhone, of A. L. A., by his supporters at Cassilis. The plate consists of a sterling silver tea pot, cream jug, and sugar basin.

DISTRESS AT NEW LAMINGTON.—The Lamington correspondent of the Newcastle Herald, writing under date of the 21st inst. says: "A meeting is to be held at Mr. Stokers' Hotel, at Lamington, on Monday evening, for the purpose of taking steps to relieve the distress and want at present existing at New Lamington, from want of employment. For the last six months the average earnings of the New Lamington miners have not much exceeded 21 per fortnight, and the consequence is that people with families cannot afford to pay for the common necessities of life, and in point of fact, several families are without bread."

customers whom they know to be honest; but when they have their bills to meet, and cannot possibly hold out much longer. The object of the promoters of Monday evening meetings is to appoint a working committee to collect subscriptions, also, to secure assistance in the shape of provisions, &c., which will be apportioned where need is required. The promoters of the movement deserve every credit, and no doubt a generous public will assist their efforts to feed the hungry."

ENGINEERING ASSOCIATION.—Yesterday evening a special meeting of members of this Association was held at the Society's rooms, School of Arts, for the purpose of considering the following subject:—Technical classes as branches of instruction in the colony. The attendance was a full Mr. Macintosh, M.L.A., Dr. Pattison, Mr. Rogers, Mr. E. Dowling, officers or committeemen of the Science and Art Department, and Mr. G. Davidson the president. RESOLVED

the chair, and called upon Mr. Laing to open the subject. Mr. Laing said that the main object of their association has been to secure a technical education for the young men of the colony, and they have succeeded in carrying it out to the extent that they would have desired. He contended that there were no adequate facilities in the colony for enabling apprentices to be proceeding to a quite a scientific knowledge of the various trades, and that the best method in the construction of railways, and yet no schools had been provided for the education of those who would have to work these railways. And no means had been provided for the growth of the colony, and to enable them to develop probably the vast mineral resources of the colony to teach them the best methods of turning our raw produce into manufactured goods. He read extracts from various works to show that America and continental countries were not in England the matter of providing technical instruction for the artisan was a country. However, the great exhibitions had had the good effect of awakening the attention of English people to the importance of the subject, and now in the mother country both elementary and more advanced scientific instruction was being given in technical schools and classes formed in all the great centres of industry. He moved the following resolution:— "That the members of this association having seen and felt the great loss and inconvenience arising from the want of a technical training, and the high cost required for carrying on successfully the various trades and industries with which they are or have been connected, consider that the establishment of a polytechnic college school or schools for teaching the ing, building, mold, manufacturing, and agricultural industries would be advantageous for the development of the intellectual material and industrial resources of the colony. That such college, school or schools, should be conducted in such a manner as would enable youths after leaving school, to be apprenticed to any trade or profession to continue their education at evening classes, and thereby acquire such special instruction and technical knowledge as would assist their progress in the trade, business, or profession, is a provision for their future pursuit in life. Seeing that provision has been made out of the public fund for primary education, grammar schools, and a university, we think a polytechnic college, school, or schools should also be provided for and established in connection with our Public Schools. It would render the system more complete, and by enabling the artisans, manufacturers, mercantile, and agricultural classes to obtain technical training, would meet the want of instruction in existing practical life which none of our educational institutions as at present constituted can supply." Dr. Pattison expressed his concurrence in the proposals to promote technical education, more in engineering, but in all branches of science. The Arts were altogether unrepresented, and he regarded this matter. Technical knowledge in several branches was already given under the auspices of the institution, but this ought to be greatly extended. There were certain rooms in the building which were available for use in the evening, and he intended to obtain practical knowledge; and the committee of the School of Arts were fully alive to the importance of his matter. A sub-committee, consisting of Mr. Dowling - a gentleman who had given much attention to the subject - Mr. Rogers, Mr. B. J. Jones, and Mr. H. J. Jones, had waited upon the Council of the Trades and Labour Association with a view to secure their sympathy in this grand object, and he thought that that body had not listened to their proposals disagreeably. They had not yet taken the least notice of the Council's views with regard to the proposal; but he thought their reply would be favourable. He might say that the Committee of the School of Arts desired a more extensive aid in carrying out this object of imparting a technical instruction in the various trades, and the importance of such instruction there could be no doubt, and the education of our youth would be incomplete without it. He quoted from a recent work by Mr. Twining to show what was being done in other branches of trade, for all were interested in technical education, or what he called practical education. Mr. E. Dowling also addressed the meeting on the advantages of a technical education, and showed how its importance had been recognized by the Education Commission appointed in England; and how practical demonstration of its benefits had resulted in the working of technological museums and institutions in England and Victoria. If such persons in the community would only provide such facilities as the Government would be given to such persons to seek to make themselves efficient in technical knowledge. The committee of the School of Arts hoped to establish a technological museum; and he thought that under the auspices of that institution classes might be formed for technical education, giving more practical training than in connection with the primary schools. Mr. Laing maintained that of the scheme were merely carried out in schools of arts it would have only a local interest. It should be paid out of the hands of the school system. Mr. Brown said that the feeling of localism need be engendered by the carrying out of the system in schools of arts. Any person could join the classes at the Sydney School of Arts without being a member of any institution, and it was proposed that there should be affiliation with all the schools of arts throughout the country. The committee of the School of Arts proposed to form classes without any out-side aid, although he thought the work of the country were as much entitled to have an institution for the technical education of the young as they were to have a University. Mr. Cruickshank commented on the want of models in other appliances for the impartment of practical knowledge to the engineering profession. The deposition from the motion of Mr. Arts was withdrawn when Mr. Laing's resolution was seconded by Mr. H. Davies and passed, and the further consideration of the subject, on the motion of Mr. Cruickshank, was deferred until the next monthly meeting of the association.

Mr. Twining proposed that there should be schools of arts, colleges, and a university; that examinations should be held and degrees should be given to stimulate the students. To follow a grade successfully, a man should have a knowledge of the science under it. Perhaps the most important thing to expect to go so far as to have a university, but they might by means of the schools of a to do much to extend technical knowledge. It was for such objects that these institutions were founded, and, if they carried them out, but they would have much more worthy of the assistance of the State than they were at the present time. Mr. Macintosh said he would be very happy to co-operate with the Association of Engineers in the matter under discussion, and he trusted that the Association would be able to carry out the project.

MONTAGU CO. LIVER OIL.—"It is with great pleasure that we bear testimony to the purity of Mr. Müller's Co. Liver Oil, which I have now used for some three years past. I reside and live in Hants, and I am a sportsman. In comparing the oil supplied by Mr. Müller with that used previously, I cannot but be struck with the difference. I have recommended to tolerate only a great deal of inferior in an institution where so many cases of scrofula are admitted. I can only commend the value of such a supply of pure cod liver oil, and of great diet value. Thomas W. T. Locke surgeon, West Suffolk Militia, Admiralty surgeon and member of the Royal Society, is the only real purveyor of pure cod liver oil in the island."
